Survival Communication: 20 Ensure Ways To Connect With Your Family While Cataclysm Are you prepared when disaster strikes? How will your family communicate with each other if you all aren't together when things go south? Do you have a plan already set in place for where you will meet? And what happens when your cell phones don't work and the power is down? These are all questions that you have to address, and things we all need to think about in this crazy world we live in. It seems like every week we hear about things happening across the globe that would put our communities in a tailspin if they happened outside our front door.

Think about natural disasters, nuclear strikes and threats, riots, looters, etc. and ask yourself, What can I do to be prepared for that in my own community? We often think about the food, water, shelter, etc., but we forget about communication. We forget that when craziness happens, we will need alternate forms of communication, because power might go down and you will need another way to communicate with family and loved ones. In this book, we'll talk about all the different ways you can communicate with each other and the importance of where to start. Here are some specifics of what we'll discuss:
